TASK 04:
Brand Content Analysis:

Crumbl Cookies (USA) vs Crumble Pakistan — Two Dessert Brands, Two Completely Different Strategies

An analysis of content style, posting frequency, engagement, visual branding, and copywriting across two leading dessert brands in the same category but different markets.

Why These Two Brands?

Crumbl Cookies (USA) and Crumble Pakistan are both dessert brands selling cookies and sweet treats, but they represent two opposite ends of the content marketing spectrum. Crumbl is a billion-dollar brand with a 30+ person social media team, running polished, high-production content at scale. Crumble Pakistan is a local brand with 203K Instagram followers that grew through Gen Z humor, memes, and chaotic personality-driven content. Comparing them reveals a powerful insight: there is no single ‘correct’ content strategy, what matters is consistency and genuine connection with your specific audience.

Quick Comparison Overview

Factor	Crumbl Cookies (USA)	Crumble Pakistan
Instagram Followers	8M+	203K
TikTok Followers	9.6M	Not primary platform
Primary Platform	TikTok + Instagram	Instagram only
Content Style	Polished, high-production video	Memes, humor, chaotic Gen Z
Posting Frequency	Daily (7x/week)	3–4x per week
Copywriting Style	Minimal, product-focused	Witty, conversational, unhinged

Visual Branding	Iconic pink, ultra-consistent	Bold, playful, trend-driven
Team Size	30+ social media staff	Small, agile team

Brand 1: Crumbl Cookies (USA)

Instagram: @crumblcookies | TikTok: @crumblcookies | Founded: 2017

Content Style

Crumbl's content strategy is built around one brilliant mechanic: a weekly rotating menu. Every Sunday night, they reveal 5 new cookie flavors for the coming week through a high-production video. This creates a weekly content event that gives followers a reason to check back every single week. The content itself focuses entirely on the product — close-up shots of cookie cross-sections, slow-motion bites, gooey centres stretching on camera. There is no long backstory, no over-the-top production narrative. Just the cookie, filmed to look as irresistible as possible.

Posting Frequency

- Instagram: daily posts, 7 days a week — mostly Reels and short-form video.
- TikTok: multiple posts per week featuring employee behind-the-scenes, flavor reveals, and user-generated content reposts.
- Stories: daily updates on new flavors, limited-time availability, and customer reactions.

Engagement

- TikTok: 9.6 million followers with millions of views per video — driven by the weekly flavor reveal format that followers anticipate.
- UGC strategy: the hashtag #crumblcookiereview has 19,000+ posts from customers posting their own reviews unprompted — free marketing at scale.
- Micro-influencer network: works with food reviewers, parents, students, and lifestyle creators rather than celebrities, making content feel authentic rather than sponsored.

Visual Branding

- Color: iconic millennial pink across all packaging, backgrounds, and digital content. Instantly recognizable even without a logo.
- Consistency: every post uses the same pink box, same color palette, same high-resolution style — the feed looks unified and premium.
- Product design: oversized, colorful cookies designed to be visually striking and reaction-worthy — the product itself is part of the content strategy.

Copywriting Style

- Minimal and product-focused: captions are short, descriptive, and direct. The product does the talking.
- Scarcity language: frequent use of ‘this week only,’ ‘limited flavors,’ and countdown language to create urgency.
- Community voice: responds to comments in a friendly, casual tone — feels like a friend rather than a corporation.

Strengths

- The weekly drop model creates a content habit — followers check back every Sunday automatically.
- Products are designed to be shared — big cookies, pink boxes, colorful designs are all inherently photogenic.
- The massive UGC ecosystem means thousands of pieces of free content are created by fans every week.
- Consistent visual identity makes every post instantly recognizable anywhere on a feed.
- Micro-influencer strategy feels authentic — content looks like a friend’s post, not an ad.

Areas for Improvement

- Limited educational or value-based content almost entirely product-focused, which can feel repetitive for non-cookie-obsessed followers.
- Less effective outside the USA where the physical product is unavailable global audiences can’t convert.
- Heavy reliance on TikTok creates platform risk, if TikTok is restricted, a major traffic source disappears overnight.

Brand 2: Crumble Pakistan

Instagram: @crumble.pk | Followers: 203K | Primary Market: Pakistan

Content Style

Crumble Pakistan’s Instagram is arguably one of the most unique brand accounts in Pakistan’s social media landscape. At first glance, it looks like a meme page or a chaotic fan account — but behind the humor lies a very deliberate content strategy. The brand uses unhinged memes, quirky fictional characters (including a cat named Meowbaksh), viral trend-jacking, and relatable Gen Z chaos to sell desserts while keeping their audience thoroughly entertained. The product is almost secondary to the personality. This is brand-as-entertainer content marketing at its most extreme.

Posting Frequency

- Instagram: 3–4 posts per week — quality and entertainment value over volume.

- Stories: frequent, used for ongoing character narratives and meme content.
- Notable campaigns: a public rivalry with India's Blinkit brand conducted entirely in Instagram comments became viral, earning coverage in Pakistani media.

Engagement

- 203K followers with a strong engagement rate — their audience is highly active, not passive.
- Viral moments: trend-jacking (Arshad Nadeem's Olympic gold, Independence Day) generates shares far beyond their follower count.
- Community participation: followers genuinely enjoy engaging because the content is entertaining, not just promotional.

Visual Branding

- Bold, playful, and trend-driven — less consistent than Crumbl USA but more culturally relevant to Pakistani audiences.
- Meme format templates mixed with product photography — the two styles coexist without feeling disjointed.
- Pakistani cultural references (local events, celebrities, sports moments) make the brand feel native rather than imported.

Copywriting Style

- Witty, conversational, and sometimes deliberately chaotic — written in the voice of a very online Gen Z person.
- Mix of English and Urdu references — bilingual communication that resonates with urban Pakistani youth.
- Brand voice is: funny, irreverent, self-aware, and relatable. Tone shifts from hilarious to subtly promotional without feeling forced.

Strengths

- Unique brand personality in a crowded market — no other Pakistani dessert brand does content this way.
- Trend-jacking creates viral moments that reach far beyond the existing follower base.
- The Gen Z audience is highly engaged — they share the content because it's entertaining, not because it's an ad.
- Low production cost — meme content can be created quickly and cheaply while still achieving high engagement.
- Cultural relevance is extremely high — the brand feels Pakistani, not like a copy of a Western brand.

Areas for Improvement

- Visual brand consistency is lower than ideal — a new visitor can't immediately identify the brand's aesthetic.
- Product showcases are often buried in the humor — someone new to the brand may not understand what is being sold.
- Limited presence beyond Instagram — no significant TikTok or YouTube strategy despite Pakistan's huge TikTok audience.
- Meme-heavy strategy may not scale well as the brand grows — larger audiences often expect more polished content.

Key Lessons from This Comparison

Studying these two brands side by side reveals three universal content marketing principles that apply regardless of budget or market:

- Consistency beats perfection: Crumbl posts every single day. Crumble Pakistan posts 3–4 times a week. Both are consistent. Neither misses weeks at a time. Consistency is what builds an audience, not viral moments.
- Personality drives loyalty: both brands have a distinct, recognizable voice. Crumbl's voice is warm and product-obsessed. Crumble Pakistan's voice is chaotic and funny. Neither is generic. A brand without a personality is forgettable.
- Design content around your audience, not your product: Crumbl designs content around the experience of getting new cookies each week. Crumble Pakistan designs content around what makes Pakistani Gen Z laugh. The product is secondary to the audience relationship.

Suggestions for a New Restaurant Brand

- From Crumbl: adopt the weekly drop mechanic — announce a 'dish of the week' every Monday to give followers a reason to check your page regularly.
- From Crumble Pakistan: inject personality into your captions — don't just describe the food, make people feel something (hunger, nostalgia, humor, warmth).
- From both: post consistently — even 3 posts a week done well beats 10 mediocre posts. Build a content calendar (see Task 1) and stick to it.
- Original recommendation: combine Crumbl's visual consistency (same colors, fonts, style on every post) with Crumble Pakistan's cultural relevance (local references, bilingual captions, trend awareness) to build a brand that is both professional and genuinely Pakistani.
